UK Government National Infrastructure Plan

On 4 December 2013, the Government published its National Infrastructure Plan, which included final prices for the new support mechanism for renewable energy technologies. The new mechanism is available to projects commissioning from 2015 onwards and, post 2017, will be the long-term replacement for the current Renewable Obligation Certificate ("ROC") regime. The final prices for onshore wind under the new regime were approximately 5% lower than the draft prices published in June 2013.

The new support mechanism has no impact on the current ROC regime. The ROC regime remains open to projects commissioning prior to April 2017 for an operating period of 20 years. The Ventus Funds' existing wind investments, as well as the wind projects identified for the D share portfolio, are structured to fit into the ROC regime. The announcement therefore has no impact on the existing or planned investments of the Ventus Funds.
